RECOMMENDED For You...

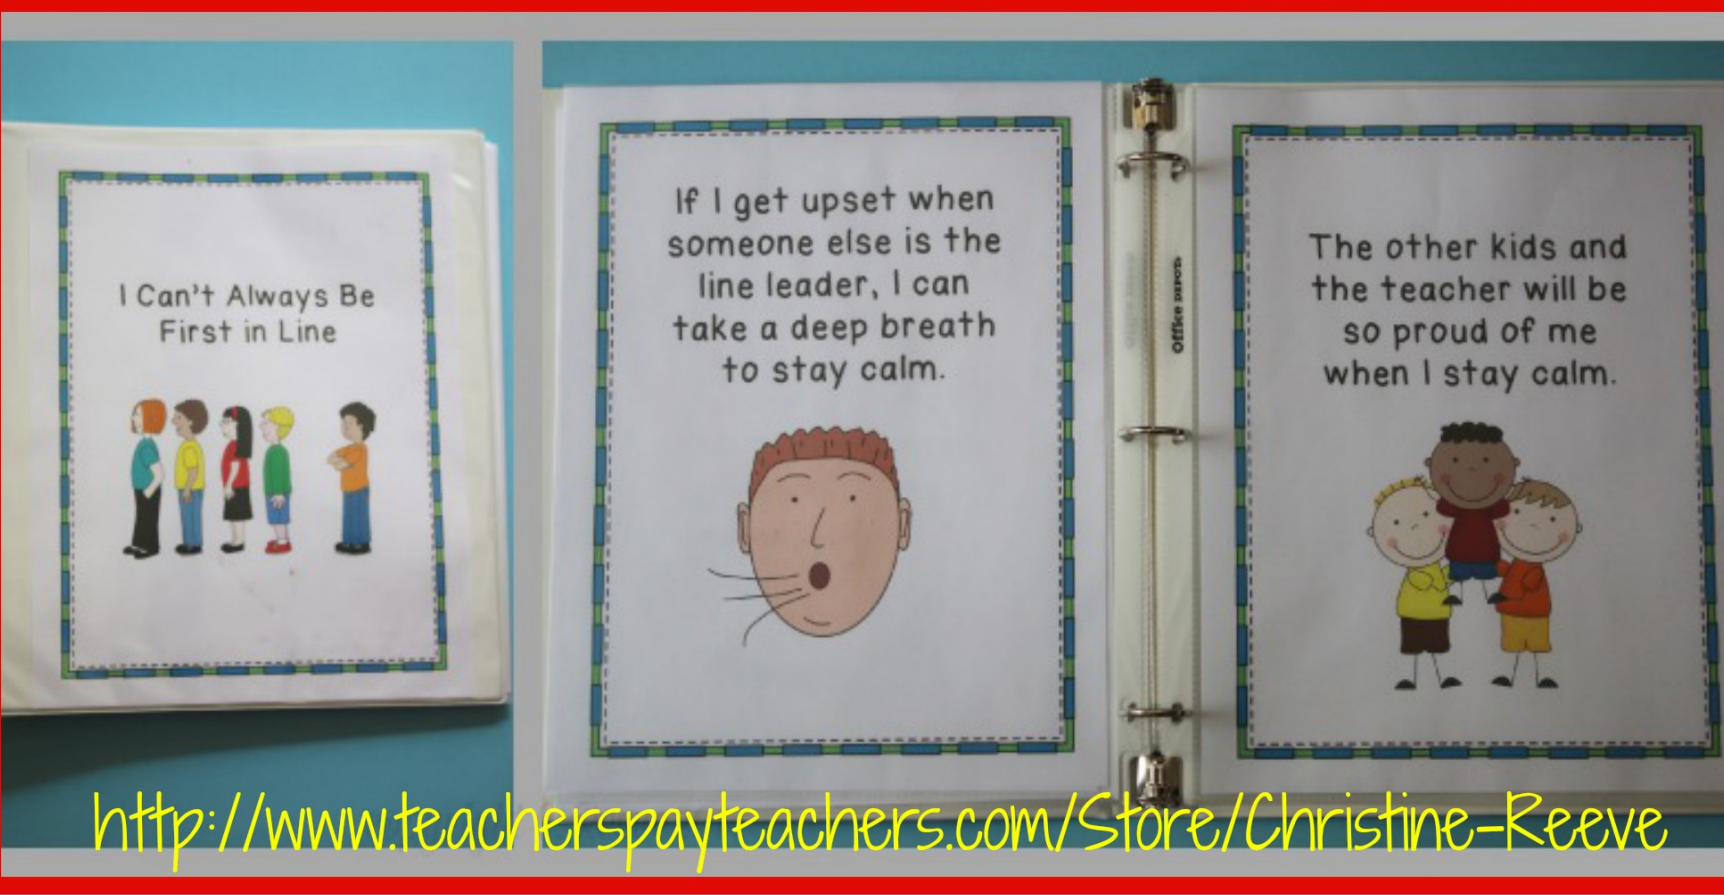

These visuals can be used to create strips to remind of directions and coping strategies or cut out and laminated individually to cue the student to use a strategy. They can also be taped to the student's desk as a reminder of strategies.

CLASSROOM ROUTINES SOCIAL NARRATIVES AND VISUAL SUPPORTS

By: Christine Reeve

I wanted to be first in line!!

<http://www.teacherspayteachers.com/Store/Christine-Reeve>

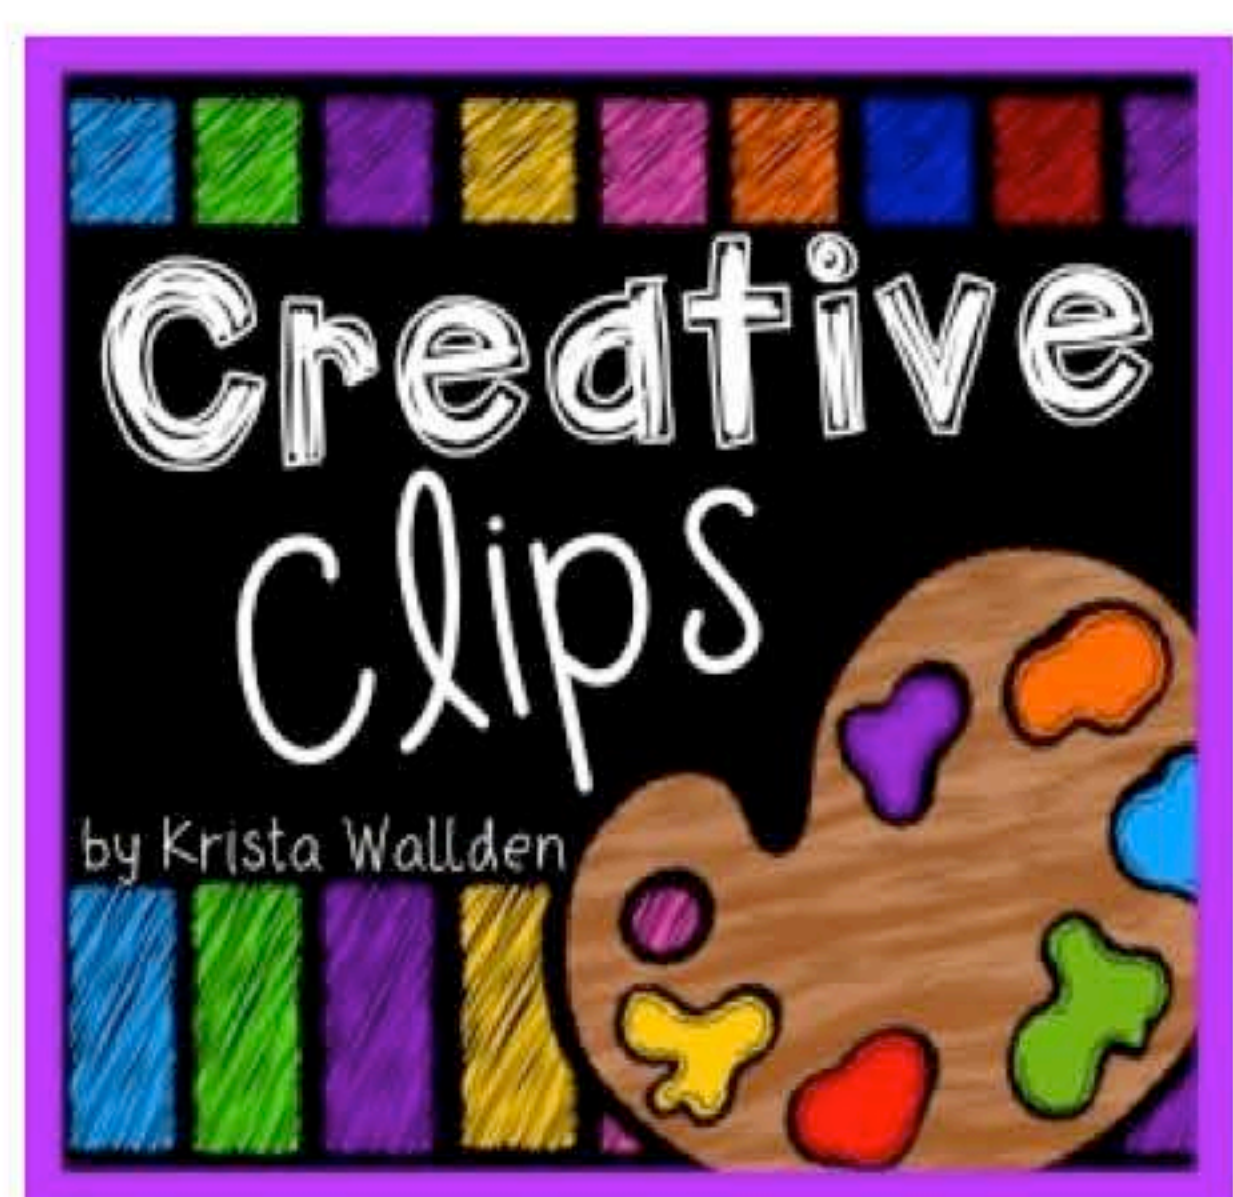

This is the ultimate print-and-go social narrative for students. Have them cut on the solid lines and staple on the vertical lines to bind them. Have them color the pictures and then you can use them to talk about the upcoming winter break. Then when you meet the family, you can send the whole book home with them to use to review and to show their child the calendar as a reminder of when school starts.

When completing the book, the students will write in the teacher's name and draw a picture of her (or you can provide a photo). Then they can find the date that they come back to school and mark that on the calendar in the book and at the end. You can decide not to include specific pages that are not relevant for a student to customize the book. I have also included alternate pages for schools that start in July, August or September. I left 2 pages blank as well so that you can fill them with photos or other information that would be helpful for your students.

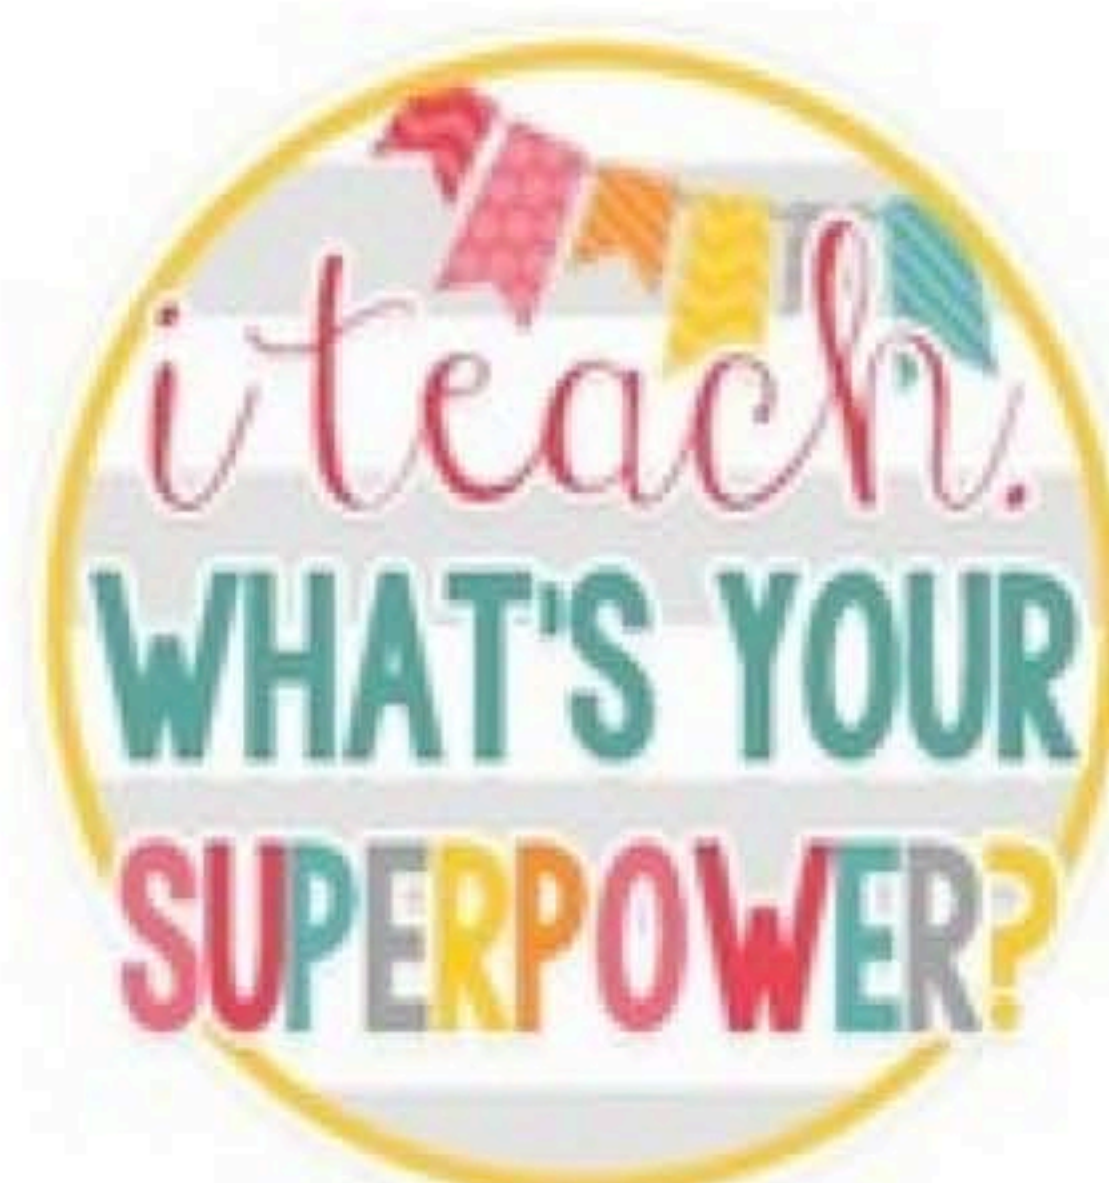

Thanks you for downloading this free activity and reading the blog!! ~~Chris
